2.2.1 - The institution assesses the learning levels of the students and organizes special Programmes for advanced learners and slow learners.

The identification of slow and advanced learners is supported by academic results and continuous evaluations. Various strategies are implemented to address their needs. These strategies include: Certain departments frequently conduct tests and tutorials. Students receive feedback regarding their performance in these assessments and tutorials.

Subject Identification: The curriculum includes subjects that are considered difficult for the typical student. Departments have been instructed to utilize the strategies for slow learners developed by IQAC. The initiative was effective as the slow learners within the targeted group showed improvement in their exam results.

It is recommended that all departments assist advanced students based on their performance in relevant subject examinations and their interactions with the faculty. IQAC suggests the following activities under this program:

1. Arranging visits to libraries
2. Distributing books from the departmental library
3. Motivating students to participate in competitions, tests, or similar events
4. Allowing advanced students access to research journals
5. Providing internet access alongside a list of relevant websites
6. Conducting surveys, projects, etc.

Outcome: Students who participated in the remedial coaching program have successfully passed their university exams, while advanced students have achieved improved performance.
